

I graduated medical school at Aristoteleio University of Thessaloniki in 2003. Most of my urological training was in Saint Savvas Oncological Hospital in Athens and was focused on operating and managing urological cancer. At the same time I did my PhD thesis on the use of photodynamic diagnosis of bladder cancer. I was certified as Urology Specialist by the University of Athens and obtained the European accreditation in Urology (FEBU) in 2011. I then worked in training posts in the UK for three years which included a fellowship on Endourology at the Queen Elizabeth Hospital, Birmingham. Since 2015 I am working as a Urology Consultant in Nicosia General Hospital. I am involved in the training of Urology registrars and medical students. I also teach Human Anatomy and Physiology to non-medical students. I have several publications in peer-reviewed journals and have given oral and poster presentations in regional, national and international congresses and scientific meetings.
