This publication lists the research activity of the Faculty of Humanities of the University of Cyprus undertaken in the years 2011-2014. It presents information on each member of the Faculty’s academic staff who is directly or indirectly related to research, such as membership in professional societies, international organisations or editorial boards, and participation in research programmes. The internal research programmes listed in this publication have been approved by the Senate of the University of Cyprus.

Publications make up a sizeable part of the information provided and only published books, chapters in books and articles are included, while publications “in press” or “forthcoming” are not. The number of journal publications and conference proceedings is limited to a selection of best ten publications by each member of the academic staff.

Members of the academic staff are listed in alphabetical order within departments and the information outlined in all research profiles is based on electronic data received directly from members of the academic staff.

The book contains three appendices:

• Appendix I lists all the doctoral titles awarded by the Faculty of Humanities and Education in alphabetical order within the period 2011-2014.

• Appendix II presents a list of abbreviated terms listed in this publication.

• Appendix III lists an index of the academic staff of the Faculty of Humanities and in alphabetical order by surname.

The publication is available on the website of the University of Cyprus

The Faculty of Humanities comprises academic disciplines that seek to advance our understanding of the world in which we live by interpreting the human experience, from individuals to entire cultures. We are interested in raising questions rather than providing absolute answers. Through our emphasis on reflection and critical thinking, the Faculty’s aim is to contribute to the University’s development of its role as an educational and research institution, in close dialogue with society and culture.

We attract research funding from a broad base of sources to support our long-term research ambitions. Our academic staff have led numerous externally funded research projects including the Research Promotion Foundation, EU-Lifelong Learning Programmes, internal programmes and selected COST Actions. Across our departments of English Studies, French and European Studies, Turkish and Middle Eastern Studies and the Language Centre, our staff publish articles in leading international academic journals, author and edit well-received academic books, and participate in conferences and other public fora for the dissemination of research findings. We also utilize our expertise to address societal challenges, by engaging with government and civil society and contributing to media debates as experts in our fields of study.

By investigating matters such as literature, language, history, communication, political thought, culture, and society, we seek to enhance the research activity of the Faculty. Finally, our students have access to experts in their chosen fields of study, strengthening both the teaching and learning experience at the University of Cyprus.

Department of English Studies

The Department of English Studies carries out research in the three major areas reflected by the new three-track undergraduate programme:

1) Anglophone Literature and Cultural Studies
2) Theoretical and Applied Linguistics
3) Translation Studies

These tracks are organized as separate sections in the Department. Faculty members actively participate in the Cyprus Society for the Study of English (CYSSE); the Linguistics Section and the Translation Studies Section are also responsible for the foundation of the Cyprus Linguistics Society (CyLing).

Research activities of faculty members in the area of Anglophone Literature and Cultural Studies include theatre studies (especially the work of William Shakespeare, comparative European theatre and melodrama), comparative literature, critical and cultural theory, postcolonial and postmodern literature, 18th and 19th century fiction, continental philosophy, psychoanalysis, feminist studies, and American studies. Members of staff are also involved in the prestigious Institute for World Literature at Harvard University.

Faculty members in the area of Theoretical and Applied Linguistics undertake theoretical research including generative approaches to syntax, semantics, phonology, language change and development (first and second language acquisition), i.e., biolinguistics. Applied research revolves around language contact between English and Greek in the Cypriot context (diglossia, lexical borrowing, prosodic and syntactic phenomena, etc.) as well as teaching English in primary schools and the development of language tests. Members of staff are involved in the following research projects:

- The Marie Curie CIG for the CGDS Morphosyntax Project on "The Development of Cypriot Greek in Individuals with Down Syndrome: Their Morphosyntactic profile, and the effects of Phonetics and Phonology" (FP7, 2012–15)
- "Adaptation of the MacArthur-Bates CDI for Cypriot Greek: Development in Toddlers" (Leventis Foundation, 2014–16, jointly with the Translation Studies Section)
- The CySLI Project on "Early Identification and Assessment of Preschool Children with Specific Language Impairment in Cyprus" (RPF, 2011–12)
- The CYCLIA Project on "L1 Acquisition of Cypriot Greek Pronominal Clitics" (RPF, 2010–12)
- The Gen-CHILD Project on “Generative Childhood-Holistic Investigations of Language Development” (UCY, 2010–12)
• The BiSLI Action, COST Action IS0804 “Language Impairment in a Multilingual Society” (ESF, 2009–13)

Faculty members in the area of Translation Studies undertake research in literary and drama translation, cultural translation, translation theory, translation methodology, translation didactics, text linguistics, and interpreting studies. Members of staff are involved in the following research projects:

• Internal Research Project "ARGUE" (UCY, 2010–12)

• EU-Lifelong Learning Programme "IVY - Interpreting in Virtual Reality" (European Commission, 2011–13)

• EU-Lifelong Learning Programme "EVIVA - Evaluating the Education of Interpreters and their Clients through Virtual Learning Activities" (European Commission, 2013–14)

Faculty members have participated in international conferences with more than 150 presentations and have organized over 20 international conference-related activities.

* No longer a member of the UCY academic staff
Although the Department of French and European Studies is relatively small, it is extremely dynamic and internationally present with respect to research. Its publications output is impressive, with over 100 publications put out between 2011 and 2014. The academic staff has published books and made contributions to books, all published by very prestigious publishers (Honoré Champion, Presses Universitaires de France, L'Harmattan, Cambridge Scholars Press). They have also contributed articles to the most prominent international journals in their specialization, for which they also sometimes serve as special issue editors or evaluators (in particular The International Journal of the Humanities, Meta, International Journal of Lexicography, Women in French Studies, Nouvelles Questions Féministes, Language in Society, The Journal of French Language Studies, French Cultural Studies, Nouvelle revue s’ esthétique, Proteus, Poésie). Numerous citations, usually infrequent in the field of Humanities, prove the international impact of a number of these publications.

Other achievements include the invitation of academic faculty as keynote speakers at international conferences, the award of grants (for visiting fellowships) from renowned universities (Princeton University) or research units (ATILF-CNRS Nancy II). And some members of staff have received international recognition; for example, the title doctor honoris causa was awarded to Professor Yiannis E. Ioannou by the University of Paul Valéry-Montpellier 3, France 2014.

The research programmes and activities of the members of the Department cover a wide range of topics, which can be subsumed under the broader disciplines of literature, theory of literature and culture, and language sciences. The academic staff’s research interests include poetry and fiction, comparative literature, literary theory and cultural studies, gender studies, interaction between philosophy and literature, science and literature, cinema and theory, history of European civilization and European studies (a strand which has been developed with the implementation of a new BA in Languages and European Studies), lexicology and lexicography, lexical semantics, pragmatics and discourse analysis, sociolinguistics, applied linguistics and second language acquisition, and translation studies and automatic translation.

The Department has developed collaborations (staff exchanges, invitations to teach, research projects) and links with various universities, laboratories, research centres and independent researchers in France (Sorbonne Paris IV, Paris 13, Cergy-Pontoise, Lyon II and III, Montpellier III, Aix-en-Provence, Nancy II, Poitiers, Caen, Lille III, LDI, etc.), Switzerland (University of Neuchâtel), Italy (University of Padua), Greece (Athens and Thessaloniki Universities, Ionian University - Corfou), Canada (University of Montreal and Toronto), and the United States (Princeton University, University of Arizona).
Between 2011 and 2014, the Department organized solely or jointly an important number of international seminars and conferences, as well as numerous talks open to the public. The most notable conferences were La Culture du Locus: De l’Espace géographique à l’Espace utopique (1200-1650) (2011), Émotion, Cognition, Communication (2011), 30th Conference Lexic-Grammar (2011), Odysseas Elytis (2011), Le(s) style(s) de Marguerite Yourcenar (2012) Traduction et appropriation d’une autre langue étrangère (2013), Le Philosophe face aux crises (2013), Enseigner et apprendre le FLE en contexte (2014) with the presence of renowned international keynote speakers.

With the introduction of two new programmes (M.A. in Didactics of French as a Foreign Language and M.A. in European Studies), and with the signature of new bilateral international agreements, the Department has had the opportunity to enter into other research areas and to further expand its research output.

No longer a member of the UCY academic staff
Research carried out by members of the Department of Turkish and Middle Eastern Studies covers a wide spectrum of disciplines ranging from Linguistics and Literature to History and Politics. This research covers the geographical area from the Balkans through the Middle East to Central Asia, from the Middle Ages to the present day. Within this vast regional coverage and time frame, research activities are undertaken partly as individual initiatives, partly in collaboration with several members of the Department and partly in conjunction with colleagues and academic institutions abroad.

In the period 2011-14 work on linguistics was concerned with a variety of subjects such as the historical grammar of Turkish, Turkic-Iranian linguistic and cultural contacts, old Anatolian Turkish and Kurmandji Kurdish, and these interests continue. Certain volumes of the etymological dictionary of Turkish begun by Andreas Tietze are being prepared here.

Research on Ottoman and Turkish Literature analyzes the transition from late Ottoman to modern Turkish literature with an emphasis on the representation of identity and society in 20th century Turkish literature and on autobiographical writing. Ottoman poetry also constitutes an object of research.

History is at present the field where the department is most strongly represented. Members of the department were and are at work on all phases of Turkish history in Asia Minor and the Middle East from the entry of the Turks into the region (11th century) to the present. Studies on aspects of pre-Ottoman history such as coinage, trade and administration in Armenia have continued. Concerning the Ottoman empire, a variety of themes are under investigation: these range from the functioning of Ottoman institutions, including the Kurdish principalities, to questions of geography, economy and urban history. The department is active in the study of Cyprus from the Ottoman period to the present day. Two projects were completed within the period 2011-14: one on the history of Larnaca from 1571 to 1878 and the other on religious identities among Turks in Cyprus. Several projects are in progress: the demography of the Ottoman period, the 17th-century Ottoman documents of the Venetian consulate in Cyprus, and the evolution of the Turkish Cypriots from a Muslim-Ottoman to a Turkish Cypriot community (1856-1931). Certain themes within the political and social history of Turkey are being researched, such as the Kurds and internal migration.

In the period 2011-14 and now, research was and is undertaken, under the supervision of advisors, by postgraduate students in their dissertations or by collaborators in research projects which are funded by local institutions and international bodies.
Research thrives on communication: lectures of academics from abroad and especially the organization of conferences provide scholarly exchange. In the past years several symposia have been organized; the proceedings of some have been published. In 2012 the department’s seminar series was instituted: here scholars from the Turkish and other departments present the results of recent research. In the department’s lecture series both scholars from abroad and members of the department talk on somewhat broader subjects.

Research requires tools and resources such as libraries. While the library of the University of Cyprus, especially its Turkish collection, provides access to an impressive range of books and periodicals, periods of work in archives and libraries abroad are nevertheless indispensable.

In sum, the Department of Turkish and Middle Eastern Studies fosters the interaction of historians, linguistics and literary scholars whose research is linked together by a focus on the areas where Turkish and Turkic-speakers have live and continue to live.
